

North Yorkshire brings Fields in Trust's Olympic Legacy benefit to the most communities in the North East

Seven years after the announcement of London as the successful host city the start of the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games is now just days away. But how will this great sporting spectacle be realised as a legacy that will benefit the whole country for generations to come?

The Queen Elizabeth II Fields Challenge, run by national charity Fields in Trust, aims to safeguard outdoor recreational spaces in perpetuity to ensure that communities will always have access to places for sport and play to mark the great events of 2012. Parks, playing fields and playgrounds continue to be threatened by development and, without these spaces, participation levels in all kinds of physical recreation would be severely reduced.

Landowners in North Yorkshire are looking to their sporting legacy the most enthusiastically in the region with a total of 19 sites protected in the county. North East Lincolnshire is the slowest to get started at the moment with just one site protected so far, but it is a big one – at 62 acres! The average acreage across North Yorkshire is 4.5 but in South Yorkshire it is five times higher at 23. Newcastle is not only the venue for Olympic football, they have also strengthened their Olympic legacy by protecting 12 sites so far, covering 126 acres. All but 5 of the sites in Newcastle have formal football pitches on them.

The Duke of Cambridge is Patron of the Challenge and is committed to the importance of outdoor spaces: 'We take it for granted that children like to run and to play games and most people agree that leaving children to be cooped up inside all day is bad for them. If we are serious about that, then we must be serious about preserving the fields and parks on which children can play. If parks and fields continue to disappear at the rate at which they have done for the past few decades, many communities will have nowhere for their young people to enjoy. Some of my happiest memories as a child were those times I spent outside playing games, and I think that is true for most people.'

Alison Moore-Gwyn, Chief Executive of Fields in Trust said 'I'm delighted by the enthusiasm with which landowners across North Yorkshire are embracing the Challenge. Parks and playing fields are often the place where our elite sports people first identify their talent. Without access to local facilities we face the possibility of a decline in the diversity of home grown athletes and sports people.'

This is echoed by The Duke of Cambridge who is also an Ambassador to the London 2012 Games: 'As we cheer on athletes at the Olympic Games, we should remember how so many of them started their career on local green spaces.'

Delivery of this wide ranging legacy programme was made possible by the support of Asda and the Asda Foundation. Paul Kelly, External Affairs Director at Asda said 'Asda shares Fields in Trust's commitment to ensuring 2012 brings lasting benefit to communities across the UK and so we are proud to have worked in partnership to deliver a programme that will give opportunities for participation in sports and activities well beyond the Olympic Games.'
