

Kent works hardest to create Olympic legacy benefit for local communities

Olympics fever is building in the South East. But what happens when the events finish? How can this fantastic opportunity be realised as a legacy that will benefit the whole country for generations to come? The Queen Elizabeth II Fields Challenge, run by national charity Fields in Trust, aims to safeguard outdoor recreational spaces in perpetuity to ensure that communities will always have access to places for sport and play to mark the great events of 2012. Parks, playing fields and playgrounds continue to be threatened by development and, without these spaces, participation levels in all kinds of physical recreation would be severely reduced.

Landowners across Kent are looking to their sporting legacy with the most enthusiasm in the region, protecting 55 sites. Close behind are Surrey landowners, the county home of Saturday's cycling road race, with 50 sites. Buckinghamshire are protecting the same number of sites as there are sports at the games with 36. East Sussex and Oxfordshire landowners are the slowest on the mainland in the area to get out of the blocks with 16 and 17 sites respectively.

The Duke of Cambridge is Patron of the Challenge and is committed to the importance of outdoor spaces: 'We take it for granted that children like to run and to play games and most people agree that leaving children to be cooped up inside all day is bad for them. If we are serious about that, then we must be serious about preserving the fields and parks on which children can play. If parks and fields continue to disappear at the rate at which they have done for the past few decades, many communities will have nowhere for their young people to enjoy. Some of my happiest memories as a child were those times I spent outside playing games, and I think that is true for most people.'

Alison Moore-Gwyn, Chief Executive of Fields in Trust said 'I'm delighted by the enthusiasm with which landowners across the South East are embracing the Challenge. Parks and playing fields are often the place where our elite sports people first identify their talent. It is particularly important in urban areas, with the pressure of housing and population, to safeguard access to local facilities. Without this we face the possibility of a decline in the diversity of home grown athletes and sports people.'

This is echoed by The Duke of Cambridge who is also an Ambassador to the London 2012 Games 'As we cheer on athletes at the Olympic Games, we should remember how so many of them started their career on local green spaces.'

Delivery of this wide ranging legacy programme was made possible by the support of Asda and the Asda Foundation. Paul Kelly, External Affairs Director at Asda said 'Asda shares Fields in Trust's commitment to ensuring 2012 brings lasting benefit to communities across the UK and so we are proud to have worked in partnership to deliver a programme that will give opportunities for participation in sports and activities well beyond the Olympic Games.'

- The Queen Elizabeth II Fields Challenge aims to protect 2,012 outdoor recreational spaces by the end of 2012 to build a legacy from the Queen's Diamond Jubilee and the Olympic Games.
- The Duke of Cambridge is Patron of the Challenge. Queen Elizabeth II Field status protects green sites for perpetuity, ensuring communities and future generations will always have access to them. The Challenge builds on the work that Fields in Trust has done so far. Established in 1925 as the National Playing Fields Association, Fields in Trust works to improve the protection, provision and quality of outdoor recreational spaces for all communities in the UK. Outside of the Challenge they currently protect 1362 fields totalling 8586 acres.
